

Coal Combustion Waste — What Can We Expect in Regulation and Litigation in 2010?

Proposed new regulations for coal-ash management are expected from the U.S. EPA in April. With the release of these new rules, what comes next for coal ash storage and disposal?

The partners of Winston & Strawn's Energy and Environmental Practices invite you to join a select group of senior professionals in the energy and environmental sectors on Thursday, April 29, 2010 for an in-depth collaborative roundtable discussion of the following:

What Is the Impact of the EPA's New Rules On Storage and Disposal of Coal Combustion Waste?

- How will the EPA's rulemaking affect operators of coal-fired facilities?
- How will operators manage the disposal of coal ash as a hazardous waste?
- What options remain for beneficial reuse or recycling of ash?
- What can we expect regarding potential challenges to the new rules?
- How will the new rules impact other regulatory requirements under the Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act?

Is Coal Ash the Next Mass Tort Hot Spot?

- What are the likely causes of action? What strategies can we expect from plaintiffs' lawyers? Who are we likely to see involved in these cases?
- What defense strategies may be employed in defense of tort claims or enforcement actions over coal ash?
- What should you do proactively to manage your litigation risks?
- Will there be cooperation between similarly situated defendants?
- What role will insurance coverage issues play?

The discussions will be led by Winston & Strawn Environmental partners, including: John Fehrenbach, Eric Gotting, Jay Holloway, Nash Long, May Wall, and Liz Williamson, along with guest speakers Christopher Long from Gradient and Mike McLaughlin from SCS Engineers.

We look forward to having you attend.
