

Maria Kutnick Discusses Winston's Efforts to Support DACA Beneficiaries During COVID-19

APRIL 15, 2020

Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA), eligible individuals, or 'Dreamers,' looking to remain in the U.S. must renew their status with the U.S. government every two years. However, even during the COVID-19 pandemic no electronic filing is allowed to complete this process. Now, lawyers and clients must communicate electronically and exchange physical paperwork to carry out the renewal process.

Maria Kutnick, Winston & Strawn pro bono counsel in Chicago, is running remote DACA clinics for the firm's attorneys in San Francisco and Texas, as well as in Chicago, hoping to help process as many DACA status renewals as possible.

Maria shares "There are so many hoops to jump through." Despite the logistical and technical challenges, Maria is undeterred and is determined to help Dreamers register with the U.S. government.

According the National New American Economy, a bipartisan think group, there are 62,600 Dreamers currently working in the health care industry in the U.S. who are helping to fight COVID-19.

Maria shares "It is it is important for us, to help them the way they help us and our society."
