

Jonathan Brightbill Discusses Clean Air Act Supreme Court Case on NPR's "Morning Edition"

FEBRUARY 28, 2022

Winston & Strawn Partner Jonathan D. Brightbill sat down with NPR's "Morning Edition" to discuss an ongoing Supreme Court case regarding the Clean Air Act and the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) ability to regulate greenhouse gas emissions from electric generating units.

Jonathan previously represented the United States in the case before the Court of Appeals. He discussed constitutional questions, including the arguments that "Congress cannot delegate unlimited power to executive agencies, no matter what the circumstances are."

Read or listen to the full story here.

Less Than 1 Min Read

Related Locations

Washington, DC

Related Topics

Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)

Clean Air Act

U.S. Supreme Court

Related Capabilities

Environmental

Related Regions

North America

Related Professionals

Jonathan D. Brightbill