

Winston & Strawn Partner Cari Stinebower Provides Ongoing Analysis of Russian Sanctions

MARCH 11, 2022

Winston & Strawn Partner Cari N. Stinebower previously worked in the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control during the Bill Clinton and George W. Bush administrations. Now focusing her practice on international trade, Cari has been able to provide various news outlets and publications with insight and perspective on the Russo-Ukrainian conflict. In her commentary, she discusses the impact of current sanctions as well as other potential actions countries may take to further pressure the Russian government.

In TIME, Cari noted that "[i]n addition to doing more to shut down Russia's oil and gas sales, the U.S. and allies could further deny Russian banks access to banking transactions, and could work with allies to impose secondary sanctions on countries trading with Russia, like China, India, and Pakistan. European countries could also expand sanctions in the insurance sector, which would remove insurance safety nets from Russian businesses."

In the Washington Examiner, Cari discussed how the U.S. and other NATO countries are also targeting Russian oligarchs in an effort to extend the reach of the sanctions, "mak[ing] it harder for these individuals and their families to continue life as normal."

Cari has also been quoted in:

- "Threat of Hard-Hitting Russia Sanctions Leaves U.S. Companies Planning for All Scenarios," The Wall Street Journal
- "Law Firms Gear Up as U.S., Europe Impose New Sanctions on Russia," Reuters
- "Balance of Power: Preparing For Sanctions," Bloomberg
- "Higher Prices, More Risk: How Russia's War on Ukraine Is Likely To Affect the Global Economy," NPR's Marketplace
- "Worst-Ever Russia Sanctions Set To Become A Business, Market Nightmare," UK Times News
- "Gazprombank: The Big Russian Lender That Dodged Western Sanctions," The Wall Street Journal

2 Min Read

Related Locations

Washington, DC

Related Topics

Russia

Ukraine

Sanctions

International Trade, Customs & Export Controls

Related Capabilities

International Trade

Energy

Financial Services

Insurance

Maritime & Admiralty

Related Regions

North America

Europe

Related Professionals

Cari Stinebower