

Nicholas Rodriguez Teaches M&A Transactional Skills Course at the University of Miami School of Law

AUGUST 22, 2022

In Fall 2022, Winston & Strawn Miami Partner Nicholas Rodriguez will join the University of Miami Law School as an Adjunct Professor to teach an M&A Transactional Skills course.

This interactive, practice-oriented course will be structured around the acquisition of an asset or business and some of the key agreements required to complete the transaction. Students will act as junior associates and work on one deal throughout the semester representing either the buyer or seller. Although the class will focus on certain provisions common to all contracts, students will negotiate and draft documents which may include a non-disclosure agreement, letter of intent outlining the main terms, due diligence memo, portions of an asset purchase agreement, a licensing agreement, or an employment agreement. Students will also communicate in writing to their clients throughout the duration of the transaction and will learn the proper selection and use of form agreements.
