Ryuk is a seasoned intellectual property (IP) lawyer with years of experience counseling clients in connection with high-tech disputes. Ryuk leverages his experience as a semiconductor circuit engineer and as an in-house counsel for a video game company to advise technology companies on various IP matters, including matters involving semiconductor design and fabrication, telecommunications and networking, consumer electronics, computer hardware, and software.

Ryuk focuses on representing technology clients in various intellectual property (IP) disputes, particularly in the semiconductor, telecommunications, networking, consumer electronics, computer hardware, and software industries. He has successfully litigated patent disputes in district courts, at the International Trade Commission, and before the Patent Trial and Appeal Board. He also advises clients on trade secret matters and patent portfolio management and licensing. Ryuk draws on his experience as in-house counsel overseeing IP and litigation matters and as an engineer designing complex system-on-chips (SoCs) to build a comprehensive understanding of clients' technology and IP issues.
