

What Is a Manufacturing Defect?

Manufacturing Defect

In the product liability context, a manufacturing defect claim arises when a plaintiff alleges that a mistake occurred during the manufacturing process of a particular product that made it different from its intended design. Unlike a design defect claim, which concerns the inherent dangers of a product's design, manufacturing defect claims focus on deviations from the product's intended specifications.

Related Capabilities

Product Liability & Mass Torts