JUNE 3, 2025

Winston & Strawn recently announced the addition of Michael Kimberly to the firm's Washington, D.C. office where he joins as co-chair of the Appellate & Critical Motions Practice. Michael brings a remarkable record of success, having argued nine cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and delivered more than 40 appellate arguments in courts across the country, with an overall win record of two for three. In addition to his appellate work, he frequently litigates challenges to federal administrative actions under the Administrative Procedure Act and to state laws and regulations under various provisions of the U.S. Constitution.

"As demand continues to grow for appellate lawyers who can shape litigation strategy from the outset, Michael's experience aligns with our vision for the D.C. office," said David Rogers, Washington D.C. office managing partner, in the press release announcing his arrival. "His track record of success and his experience in areas central to our clients in this region, including federal regulatory challenges, taxation, ERISA, and healthcare, will be instrumental in strengthening our presence."

"Over the coming months and years, I would like to help grow the appellate and critical motions practice, not only to ensure that it can support client demand within the firm's litigation department, but to make it an even more dominant destination practice in its own right, where clients think to bring their most important and challenging appeals and regulatory litigations," Michael told Law360.
