

Winston & Strawn Defeats Class Action Suit on Behalf of Maker's Mark

MAY 4, 2015

On May 4, 2015, the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Florida ruled in favor of Winston client Maker's Mark and parent company Beam Suntory in a class action lawsuit. The ruling by U.S. District Judge Robert L. Hinkle dismissed the complaint of two Florida consumers who alleged the bourbon brand falsely marketed itself as "handmade." The case was dismissed with prejudice.

Beam Suntory is the first to claim victory in a series of lawsuits filed over the past year against spirits and beer companies alleging that they falsely market their brands.

Amanda Groves, head of litigation for Winston's Charlotte office, represented Maker's Mark in this matter.

Less Than 1 Min Read

Related Locations

Charlotte

San Francisco

Related Topics

Food and Beverage Litigation

Food Class Action Litigation

Class Actions

Food and Beverage

Related Capabilities

Class Actions & Group Litigation

Food & Beverage

Related Regions

Related Professionals

Amanda Groves

Gretchen Scavo